CLOCKWORK ORANGE

CLOCKWORK ORANGE
Debate continues to rage over whether orange dials actually aid visibility at depth, but since Doxa, maker of the first commercial diving watch, proclaimed its efficacy, the colour has stuck. This Luminox was developed with Navy Seals – a group who know a fair bit about dark water – and consequently its tritium gas tubes make for easy reading in difficult conditions. At the other end of the spectrum, the Urwerk's turbine design displays minutes across the bottom of the face using wandering hour 'satellites' as the hand. Meanwhile, Raymond Weil's Freelancer cemented its position as a credible water baby after being used by the Raseteam Sailing crew.
